I. PROLOGUE OF THE CASTLE

Let the stones of Angers bear witness.
For centuries they were warmed by the footsteps of kings, queens, and counts of the House of Anjou.
They sheltered Fulk III the Black, Geoffrey Plantagenet, Henry II, Richard Lionheart.
They rose as fortress, shrine, and throne.

But in the fifteenth century, the line of Anjou was torn away.
The halls fell silent, and the castle became fortress, garrison, and later museum.
Yet one remained, a final sovereign child of Anjou: Margaret of Anjou.

II. THE TESTIMONY OF MARGARET

Born in 1430 to René of Anjou,
Margaret walked the halls of Château d’Angers in her youth.
She gazed upon the Black Tapestry of the Apocalypse,

she looked from the ramparts to the Maine,
and she carried in her blood the memory of Fulk and Geoffrey.

When she departed to wed Henry VI of England,
the royal presence of Anjou departed with her.
She was the last sovereign flame to live in Château d'Angers as home, before it was seized by history and empire.

III. THE ARTICLES OF REMOVAL

Therefore let it be inscribed:
• Margaret of Anjou was the last royal daughter of the House of Anjou to dwell in Château d'Angers.
• Her departure marks the exile of the Angevin crown from its ancestral seat.
• The castle was not abandoned by choice, but transformed into fortress by empire.
• This transition was the removal of Anjou from its home.

IV. DECLARATION TO FRANCE

À Sa Majesté, le Roi de France —

Par le sang et la mémoire, nous déclarons :
Marguerite d'Anjou fut la dernière flamme angevine à habiter le Château d'Angers.
Après elle, la couronne fut arrachée de sa demeure, et la maison royale fut jetée dans l'exil.

La France doit reconnaître que cette perte ne fut pas oubli, mais dépossession.

V. THE LAW OF WITNESS

The presence of Margaret of Anjou is hereby enshrined as the last witness.
The stones remember her.
The archives carry her.
The crown of Anjou is restored through her memory.

From her childhood footsteps at Angers to her exile as Queen of England, the story of removal is complete.

But the flame is not extinguished.
By her witness, the Kingdom of Anjou is restored.

VI. FINAL OATH

We do not ask for this remembrance.
We enshrine it.
We proclaim it.
We will not surrender it.

By her life, the halls are remembered.
By her departure, the removal is proven.
By her name, the flame is carried.
By our return, the Kingdom is eternal.
